

Accepting Temp Work when You are Seeking a Permanent Position

If you're like most Americans, you're going to switch careers or employers at least four times in your life. When this happens and you're not sure of your next move, the uncertainties and unknowns can be stressful. What if you have to relocate? Do you have enough money to get by in the interim? How long will it take to land another position? Are you qualified enough for the type of job you want? The questions are endless. With that said, one of the most important things to consider is what do you do in the meantime? Obviously, you're going to look for new opportunities. But what if a temporary offer comes along? Should you take it? Or will it distract you from looking for something long term? It's a tough decision but we have some ideas.

Reality

Although taking a temp assignment or two isn't what you want to do for the rest of your life, it might not be the worst idea. The reality is that more and more, employers are looking to hire contract workers because they don't have to offer employee benefits that hurt their bottom line. As a result, it might take you longer than you'd like to find that lucrative fulltime position with all the extras you're after.

Financial Help

Even if you're set and can survive for a while without a salary, it's a comfort knowing that you can rely on some steady income at least for a while. As much as you might not like it, you have to think in both the short term and long term. That's especially true when it comes to your savings. Even if you have enough money to get by for a few months, not having to burn through it in the short term means you won't have to replenish it later on.

Opportunity to Learn and Grow

We get it, taking a temporary position might bruise your ego a bit. But guess what, more often than not these opportunities give you a chance to learn something new, refine your skills and get paid. Let's be honest, adding new skills and more experience to your resume is never a bad thing.

No Employment Gap

Because employers are hiring more temporary or contract workers, it can take longer to find permanent employment when you're looking for a new job. And guess what? When you finally go to apply for that permanent position, the hiring manager doesn't want to see any significant gaps on your resume. That's another way temporary work can help. Instead of having to explain why you've been unemployed for 10 months, you can show that you've kept your skills sharp until the right opportunity came along.

Networking

Even as a temporary employee, you're going to have the chance to meet and work closely with people in an organization. As you build professional relationships and prove your worth, others are going to notice. These folks know other people and can prove to be a great resource in connecting you with their networks and be great references down the road.

It Might Lead to Something Permanent

It's amazing how many times temporary gigs turn into full-time positions. What starts out as a three-month contract to implement a new project or handle a spike in workload often times turns into a permanent role with a pay raise and benefits. The logic is pretty simple. Organizations prefer to hire internally when a new position comes open. Even if you're on a contract for a limited time, you will already have been thoroughly vetted and given the opportunity to prove yourself. So, as long as you put forth your best effort and get results, you never know what might happen.

Temporary work is just that, temporary. And sure, you're going to want to find something permanent after a while. But is it really all that bad? Would you rather spend your time between jobs worrying and draining your bank account or sharpening your skills and gaining valuable experience? At the end of the day, temp work might not be your dream job. But if you're willing to swallow your pride and seize the opportunity, the experience can prove to be a catalyst to propel you in the right direction.

If you are an experienced employee in the Life Sciences industries, contact me, Jeff King for help finding a high quality position in the pharmaceutical, medical device or biotech fields. I am here to help. You can reach me at jking@rqfocus.com or (541) 639-3501.

---

The Fine Line of Being a Boss and Friend

A lot has changed in the workplace since your father spent his 30 years being a company man. It used to be that bosses were just that, bosses. They commanded respect, called all the shots, were imposing and held your livelihood in their hands. The boss was the last guy you wanted to piss off.

While some things remain the same, there's a lot that's changed too. Sure, the boss is still the person in charge. But, if you're in a position of leadership, you've probably realized that how you go about your business and interact with the people you manage is vastly different from the model of old. Instead of barking orders, handing out disciplinary actions and leading by fear, you now have to play the part of mentor, friend, confidant and communicator. If it sounds like you have to be both a boss and friend in order to be an effective leader in the modern workplace, it's because it's true.

Honesty

If you think about your closest friends, it's expected that you're honest with each other. The same goes for your relationships at work. If an employee isn't making the grade, they need to know. Keep in mind that when you deliver constructive criticism, you need to both be tactful and not beat around the bush. Your employees want honesty and transparency and it's your job to deliver it.

The same holds true for communicating with employees when they go above and beyond. If you notice someone performing exceptionally well, by all means let them know. At the end of the day, you're expected to be candid with your feedback both positive and constructive.

There's No "I" in Team

You're the one in charge, that's a fact. But guess what? You're in charge of a team. In order for your organization to perform optimally, it has to be a total team effort. That means creating the space for everyone's voice to be heard in the decision-making process. When issues arise, it's imperative that you solicit feedback from everyone. Sure, some people's ideas won't be realistic, but the mere fact that they had a chance to be heard means the world and also helps them get on board with the final decision. At least they were heard.

Hang Out

There's an ongoing debate about crossing professional lines when it comes to socializing and recreating with colleagues. The old guard maintains that work should stay at the office while the new school of thought encourages social interaction outside the office. While there's no defined line, studies have shown that engaging with your colleagues in a relaxed environment humanizes the experience and can actually be a catalyst for innovative ideas and candid conversations without fear of reprimand. So, maybe that Friday happy hour isn't such a bad idea after all.

BUT, the terms change when it comes to social media. It's absolutely fine to endorse someone for a skill on LinkedIn. However, overly engaging and Facebook and Instagram is never a good idea. First, doing so can be seen as an invasion of privacy. Second, if you're the boss that "creeps" or "pries," you liable to stir a hornet's nest and open yourself up to all sorts of negative accusations and outcomes. It can become an HR nightmare.

Keep it Professional

We've all heard stories about working relationships becoming more... And by more we mean romantic. Though it goes without saying, this is something that's worth repeating. Even if there's an energy, mutual attraction, shared interests or whatever, mixing work with pleasure is never a good idea. The conflicts of interest, propensity for office rumors and not to mention people's lives are at stake. So please, don't let interoffice romance ruin your career or someone else's.

Be Supportive and Empathetic

Everyone that works for you is human. And with that experience comes hard times on occasion. If someone on your team is going through a tough divorce, the loss of a loved one or any other personal struggle, you need to be there for them. Maybe you're the only one they can talk to in a moment of need. Just the simple act of listening can be more meaningful than you might think.

If someone you manage comes to you and asks for help or advice, it's your duty to assist however you can. Not only is it the decent thing to do, it can often be the difference in the employee continuing to perform or not making the grade, or even deciding to stay with the company or look for other opportunities.

It's a fine line you're going to have to walk as a leader. The line between boss and friend. There's no plug-and-play formula that shows you exactly how to do it. With that being said, if you make a conscious effort to stay within professional bounds while showing everyone on your team that you're a human just like them, your entire organization only stands to benefit.

---

How To Manage Stress at Work

Have you ever thought how nice it would be to work in Spain where your day starts mid-morning, you take lunch a couple hours later and then enjoy a siesta? Even though that leisurely Monday through Friday routine sounds wonderful, your workday reality is probably quite the opposite. If you're like most Americans, your typical day at the office involves getting there early, eating at your desk, running from one meeting to another and working late. Maybe you're even there on weekends. By the end of the week all the stress leaves you on empty mentally, physically and emotionally. While stress isn't going away anytime soon, there are some simple measures you can take to manage it.

Don't Gossip

Every office has that person that makes it their duty to know about everyone else's business. They know that Bob is going through a nasty divorce, Julie has her eyes on that promotion and Mike has been subject to disciplinary action. Even worse, they make it a habit of sharing all these tidbits with everyone around them. Even though you might be tempted to learn some juicy little nugget, nothing good ever comes of it. Before you know it, you're embroiled in a nasty game of he said she said that can lead to damaged relationships and bring down the morale of everyone in the organization.

Start Your Day Fresh

This goes back to the night before and making sure you get enough sleep. Once you're up and about, give yourself the time you need to properly start your day. Incorporating habits into your morning routine like meditation, journaling and getting some physical exercise help you arrive at the office with a clear head and positive attitude making it easier to handle stress the rest of the day.

Keep Your Desk Clean

How many times have you come into the office knowing where you left off the day before but unable to find the right report buried in the pile of papers on your desk? You go about frantically searching high and low trying to make sense of where everything is at and before you know it, you're stressed out before you get anything done.

All it takes to avoid this type of chaos is a little tidying up when you're done with your day. Not only will this habit reduce your level of stress in the morning, it will increase your productivity as well. It also helps you mentally to start "disconnecting" from work, which can also reduce work related stress.

Avoid Multitasking

The distractions you face at work are untold. Between notifications, email alerts, phone calls and interruptions from colleagues, it's amazing we're able to get anything done at all. And guess what all the constant stimulation does? Increases stress. If you want to maintain your focus throughout and reduce stress, focus on only one project at a time. Everything else will be there when you're done and you'll get a sense of accomplishment instead of feeling like you have several things hanging.

Know What's Expected

One of the biggest contributors to stress in the workplace is not knowing what you're expected to do. This can be as simple as a poorly written job description or inadequate communication from the top. Whatever the case, it's almost impossible to do your job when you don't know what you don't know. If you find yourself in this position, be proactive and schedule a meeting with your supervisor to discuss what's missing and the problems you're having. If done in a respectful manner, this conversation often lowers stress for both parties and can also save you some time by focusing on what you know needs to be done.

Take Breaks

There's someone you work with that spends the entire day in their office. They only times they get up from their desk are you use the restroom and microwave lunch. You know who this person is. They're probably dead serious 100% of the time, seemed stressed and maybe even unhappy. Now think about the people that get out of the office at lunch and take short breaks throughout the day. It's not that the latter doesn't care about their job. Rather, they realize the importance of staying physically and mentally fresh. You might think that the desk jockey gets a lot more done each day but, it's almost always the opposite.

So, whenever you feel stressed or overwhelmed, take a short break to stand up, leave your office and move around. Getting away from a problem or project for a little bit when you're stressed will help give you a new perspective, which in many cases reduces the stress and may even allow more creativity to finding a solution to the problem. When you come back, you'll find yourself ready to tackle whatever is in front of you with a clear mind.

As much as we'd all love it, stress in the workplace isn't going away anytime soon. It's how you manage and handle the stress that makes all the difference. If you're not careful, stress can affect your productivity, relationships with everyone around you and even your health. But, if you take some actionable steps to manage and reduce stress, you'll find yourself happy, healthy and maximizing your potential day in and day out.

As a Life Sciences recruiter for the pharmaceutical, biotech, and medical device industries, I can help optimize your work place by building an efficient team. A great team will work together well and decrease stress in the workplace. Contact me, Jeff King at jking@rqfocus.com or (541) 639-3501.

---

Best Ways to Boost Your Focus on Demand

Some people are doing it. As crazy as it sounds, they're videotaping themselves in the office for a day to see how much time they waste. And what those that have dared to take on this little experiment have found is pretty staggering. Between, Facebook, Instagram, LinkedIn, checking fantasy football scores, email and cell phones, there's a lot of time that is just flat out wasted during the day. It shouldn't come as much of a surprise either. But, in a time when demands in the workplace are at an all-time high, doesn't it reason that you should be as productive as you can?

At the end of the day it all comes down to your ability to focus. So, how do you focus on demand? We've got a couple ideas.

Take a Break

Yep, that's right. Countless studies have proven that taking frequent short breaks is essential for maximizing your productivity. In fact, people that take a five-minute break every hour to leave the office, take a short walk and get away from their desk entirely are much more productive than those that are seated behind a computer screen for hours on end. Try scheduling purposeful breaks throughout the day. You'll find that your ability to focus on a singular task and get things done increases immediately.

No More Multitasking

It happens dozens of times per day. You're working on something and the new email alert shows up in the bottom right corner of your computer screen. You see it, click on it, and before you know it, you're embroiled in responding and have totally lost track of what you were working on before. When you finally return to the task at hand, that email is still on your mind and you have to backtrack to figure out where you left off. Talk about wasted time.

Try time blocking. If you purposefully set time aside for certain tasks each day and stick to it, you'll be shocked at how well you're able to maintain focus and get things done.

Music Anyone?

Maybe it's not for everyone and we're certainly not talking about having the latest Katy Perry single on repeat. But if you find yourself struggling to maintain your focus, you might want to experiment with have some soothing classical or piano music playing in the background while you work. Studies have shown this to be an effective strategy to stay on task.

Get Rid of Clutter

There's nothing worse than coming into the office in the morning and not being able to see your desk. Quality reports on top of company memos buried under those thank you notes you forgot to send yesterday. By the time you've cleaned up the mess, 30 minutes have gone by and you're still not sure where you left off.

If you make a point to stay organized and clean your desk off before you leave every day, you'll be able to get off to a fast start the following morning and maintain that momentum throughout the day.

Breathe

Think about how your body reacts when you're stressed or under the gun. Do you tense up? Does your breath become shallow? Of course, that's the natural reaction when you're uncomfortable. Your mind is racing with 1,000 different thoughts and your ability to focus becomes greatly diminished. Even though it seems counterintuitive, this is when you should actually slow things down and take some conscious deep breaths. Doing so helps you stay in the present and allows your mind to more clearly process everything that's going on.

The Power of a Nap

It's not likely that it will be possible every day, but if you can carve out 10-30 minutes for a power nap in the early afternoon, it can make all the difference between being worthless the rest of the day and feeling recharged. The body and mind have an amazing ability to bounce back quickly, they just need a little time.

Exercise

We're not talking about doing an entire workout in the gym. But, if you've been sitting behind your desk all morning, your blood circulation slows and it's easy to become tired. If you start feeling lethargic or your mind starts to wander, take a couple minutes to do jumping jacks, go on a walk or any other kind of quick physical activity. Before you know it, you'll feel refreshed and awake.

Ok, you don't have to go to the extreme of filming yourself in the office to conjure up some ways to boost your focus and see just how much time you're wasting throughout the day. Instead, be conscious of distractions like email, your phone and social media. There's nothing wrong with taking mental breaks to indulge these habits, you just don't want to let them get in the way of your productivity. If you implement some of the strategies above when you're feeling tired or distracted, you'll be amazed by just how much more you can get done between 9:00 and 5:00.

As a Life Sciences recruiter in the Bay Area, I have worked with many types of professionals who have specific business processes. I can help you find a high-quality employee that fits in your company culture. Contact me, Jeff King, if you need an employee or are search for a new job in the pharmaceutical, biotech, or medical device industries.

---

Methods to Get Your Team to Follow Your Lead

At some point in your career you've either managed or been part of a team where there was a noticeable disconnect between the person at the top and everyone else. Sure, objectives and responsibilities were explicit, but when it came to getting things done and maximizing productivity, it was a constant struggle. Any number of factors can cause a team to not function at its best, but employee engagement is almost always part of the problem. So, if you're struggling to get the results you want from your team or feel like you're struggling to get everyone on the same page, read on.

It Starts with You

If you want to get the most out of everyone on your team, you need to show them that you're 100% invested. Sure, you've got your own set of responsibilities, but you have to demonstrate that you're not afraid to get your hands dirty too. Whether that means carving out time every week to help with the more menial activities or just checking in with folks on an individual basis, the people you manage need to see you as one of them.

Never Lose Sight of the Bigger Picture

When work becomes repetitive and the members of your team focus are just getting through the day, you're headed for trouble. Before you know it, productivity begins to slide along with the quality of work being done. All of sudden, doing the bare minimum becomes arduous and it's all you can do to meet deadlines and basic operating goals.

This is why it's important that everyone on your team feels like they are working for something bigger than themselves. When you're able to connect day-to-day tasks with a grander plan, your team members take pride in their work and become more productive as a result. Even though it might not happen overnight, there are plenty of ways to motivate your employees to get behind your mission. Bonuses, paid time off and team bonding activities are just a few.

Make Collaborative Decisions

You have the final say when it comes to making big decisions. But if you want to get the most out of your team, their input needs to be considered before you make a final call. When people feel like they're empowered to share their thoughts and ideas, they automatically become more invested in the process. While your meetings with managers and higher-ups aren't going anywhere, regularly scheduling all hands-on deck meetings with your team fosters an environment of inclusion. And the best part is you'll often find that some of the best and brightest ideas come from the folks that are in the trenches on a daily basis.

Recognize Strengths and Delegate

No one wants to work for a boss that feels like they have to do everything themselves in order to get things done right. That's why recognizing people's strengths and delegating responsibilities accordingly is so powerful. Do you have an entry-level employee whose attention to details is impeccable? Great, charge them with reviewing documents or procedures and follow up communication with those involved. Not only will you have more time to focus your attention in other areas, you'll make that team member feel valued as well.

Make Your Strategy Visual

Everyone has different learning styles. Some people need to learn by doing while others just want a set of directions. There's no underestimating the power of seeing something in action, however. That's why video has become so prevalent in the workplace. When people are able to see what success looks like with their own eyes, it becomes cemented in their minds. Seeing is believing and when you're able to make your words come to life, your ability to lead and influence grows exponentially.

In order for your team to reach its full potential, it's paramount that they follow your lead. If you're the type of leader that spends all day in his office shouting orders and circulating company memos, you don't stand on a chance. On the flip side, if you make a conscious effort to lead by example, give people the freedom to utilize their strengths and involve them in the decision-making process, your team can become an unstoppable force capable of achieving the kinds of results you've only dreamed of.

---

Why Body Language Matters for Leaders

As a leader you're no stranger to making crucial decisions, inspiring others, giving tough love and talking in front of individuals and big groups. Think about the last time you prepared for a presentation or spoke in front of the entire team of organization. Doing this is old hat, but you still went through your normal routine of practicing in front of the mirror and memorizing important talking points. You can do this in your sleep, but you're disciplined enough to not cut any corners. But when was the last time you stopped to think about your body language? The fact is, even if your words are the most compelling ever, they only go so far. When people listen to you speak, they aren't just listening to your words, they are subconsciously reacting to your body language. So, what exactly does that mean?

First Impressions Count

When you first meet someone, they will immediately make a judgement about you as a person. Sure, you shouldn't judge a book by its cover but unfortunately, it's human nature. Whether someone sees you as warm and trustworthy or standoffish and questionable, every interaction from that point forward will be judged through that initial filter.

In order to make that initial interaction a positive one with everyone you meet, there are some important things keep in mind.

Eye Contact

When you meet someone the last thing you should be doing is checking email on your smartphone. If your attention isn't wholly focused on the individual, you'll immediately send signals that you don't have time for them or they're unimportant. Instead, as you approach a stranger, make eye contact. Right away this conveys that you're open and friendly.

Smile

It's no secret that happiest people are the ones that smile the most. There's nothing that exudes warmth and openness like a genuine smile. When you smile, you put others at ease and allow them to let down their guard.

Lean In

Have you ever heard of Brene Brown talk about leaning in? She's talking about vulnerability. And there's a reason she chose the phrase leaning in. When you lean into someone upon meeting them, you show them that your guard isn't up and you're vulnerable, just like they are. So, when you go in for that initial handshake, meet the person you're greeting halfway.

Handshake

Speaking of shaking hands... How you shake someone's hand tells them a lot about you. If your handshake feels like someone grabbing a dead fish, you portray disinterest and lack of confidence which are huge turnoffs. On the other hand, if your handshake firm and solid, it lets the other person know that you are genuinely excited to meet them.

Talking with Your Hands

Think about the most memorable speeches you've ever heard. Whether it was at a company event with a large group of people or just a meaningful conversation with a friend or colleague, think about what the speaker did with their hands. Chances are they weren't resting in their pockets or glued to the side of a podium. In order to add meaning to their words, great speakers use their hands to express the message they're trying to get across. So, next time you're talking with someone you want to make an impression on, don't be afraid to use your hands. This isn't something that's mechanical or that you should think too much about. Just let it happen naturally and your listener is sure to see you in a favorable light.

The Importance of Face-to-Face

Even though the majority of modern communication occurs over text messages, emails or video, there is no substitute for face-to-face. Sure, our ability to share information quickly and easily has made our lives easier, but the fact remains that it takes talking to someone in person to develop a real connection and build rapport. This kind of communication allows you to both send and receive so much more information than what is being said. Things like tone of voice, open body language, hand gestures, pacing and eye contact can shape someone's opinion of you even more than the words you say.

As a leader, it's your job to communicate with people. You wouldn't be in the position you are if you didn't know what to say. But, what is often forgotten is that words only tell half the story. People read body language more than they listen to words. With that in mind, if you can become a master of using positive body language when communicating with others, your potential to lead and inspire is unlimited.

As a recruiter for the Life Sciences industries in the Bay Area, I would with business leaders to improve internal company processes through hiring the right employees. If you are looking for a new employee in the pharmaceutical, medical device, or biotech industries in the Bay Area, contact me, Jeff King.

---

Steps to Setting Clear Expectations at the Office

If you're a part of an organization of any size, you know the importance of setting and maintaining expectations. Whether expectations are placed on you or ones you set for the people on your team, they need to be made clear and are understood by everyone involved. Whenever ambiguity is present, you run the risk of poor communication, people cutting corners and diminished productivity. So, just how should you go about setting expectations? Try some of the following steps.

It Starts With You

People expect you to lead by example. If they see you taking shortcuts or giving anything less than your best effort, you can't expect them to give everything they've got. This is why setting expectations for yourself is a crucial first step. It's a good idea to write them down on paper and post them somewhere you can see them on a regular basis. Having clear expectations in your head is one thing. Putting them on paper is much more effective, however. Not only do you have a visual reminder, you allow others to see the standard you've set for yourself as well.

Where in Your Organization Do Expectations Need to Be Made Clearer?

Before you go off reinventing the wheel, put in the effort to examine every aspect of your organization to see where improvements can be made. Is there a breakdown in communication between production and quality assurance? Are there issues with people showing up late? How can the regulatory department meet deadlines more consistently? By identifying gaps, you can hone in on where expectations need to be adjusted or made clearer.

Communicate

Once you've identified where expectations need to be made clear, the next step is to communicate them to everyone involved. Whether you're addressing an individual or an entire group, meet everyone on their level. Instead of telling them they aren't doing what's expected, frame the conversation in a way that makes them feel empowered to raise the bar. Explaining why changes are being made in the context of how the entire company benefits is also a great strategy.

Make Everyone Part of the Conversation

When you're setting new expectations, always remember that people have expectations of you as a leader too. This is why it's important to have a dialogue. By asking people what they need from you helps both parties become clear on what's expected. Are there supplies or tools that your group need to make their jobs easier? Are there antiquated processes that need to be updated? When you make everyone part of the conversation, they feel appreciated and the results will show in their work.

Write Them Down

After you've communicated what's expected going forward, people will be enthused. After a while though, the hype fades and it's easy for people to forget or just go back to the old way of doing things. If you write down what's expected and post it somewhere visible, you provide clarity and a constant reminder for everyone.

Agreement

After you've had a mutual conversation and identified what everyone expects from each other, all parties have to buy in. That's why it's important for everyone to read, understand and come to agreement on what's been written. If you have any dissenters, the chances of your expectations being met decrease dramatically. If you're dealing with an individual that has disciplinary issues or isn't otherwise making the grade, you may want to have them sign a written contract that clearly states what's expected.

Take Time to Re-evaluate

In the age of technology, workplaces of all types have to be constantly evolving to be successful. Just because the expectations you set and the systems you implemented last year were working, doesn't mean they still are. Take time to check in with your people on a regular basis. Is there a policy that no longer makes sense? Does the IT department have everything they need to keep your systems running their best? By doing this, you not only keep a pulse on what's going on with your organization, you show people that you care. This goes a long way in determining how effective you can be as a leader.

It's no secret that the most successful organizations have clear expectations for both leadership and employees. They open channels of communication, set boundaries and define responsibilities. But how you go about setting those expectations is what makes the difference. Instead of sending out a company-wide memo that most people won't even read or barking orders at your team, go through the steps listed above. Doing so provides you an in-depth look at where improvements need and makes everyone feel like part of the process.

---

How Public Speaking Can Help

Your Career

It's something even the brightest minds in business fear. Something you avoid at all costs. Even those that do it for a living never get truly comfortable with it. We're talking about public speaking. And you're going to have to do it at some point in your career. Whether it's giving a presentation to your team or delivering a speech in front of the entire company at the Christmas party, developing the skill of public speaking is a must. Sure, it's not your favorite thing in the world but believe it or not, developing this difficult skill can be a great benefit both personally and professionally.

It Makes You Memorable

When you speak in front of any number of people, their focus is on you. For however long the stage is yours, you have everyone's undivided attention. Great public speakers know this and instead of fearing the opportunity in front of them, they see it as a chance to have influence and make a lasting impression. When you have a chance to speak in front of a group, they are going to look to you as their leader.

There's Scarce Competition

Most people avoid public speaking at all costs. Whether it's giving a best man speech at a wedding or delivering a sermon at church, there aren't many people in the audience that have the courage to share their thoughts and wisdom in front of a crowd. If you're able to become even an average public speaker, people will look to you with respect because you possess a skill most of them don't.

You Connect with People

If you think about some of the most memorable speeches ever given, names like Martin Luther King Jr., John F. Kennedy and Winston Churchill come to mind. So, what made all these names great public speakers? Their ability to show empathy and connect with people. If you're able to speak in a way that conveys passion, vulnerability and inspiration, your audience can't help but be drawn to you. In short, you will be their champion.

You Can Be a Catalyst for Change

Think about the last time you received that email that was circulated to everyone in the organization announcing a new direction or change in policy. You read it and talked about it with your colleagues but probably didn't give much more thought. Now think about the last time someone at the top gave a speech in front of everyone. Even if it was last year, it still sticks out in your mind.

The fact remains that listening to someone speak always has a greater impact than a voiceless note sent electronically. If you want to enact change in your life or your organization, do it by speaking to people, not through a form letter or email.

Leaders Get Promoted

Have you ever found yourself stuck in a rut? You want to advance in your career, but you keep bumping into that glass ceiling. You know that people with leadership qualities get promoted but you just can't figure out how to break through. Developing the skill of public speaking is a great place to start. If you're able to speak in front of people, you have the power to change their minds. It's no secret that leaders have the ability to influence others and there might not be any greater way to have influence than the spoken word.

You Become More Confident

Everyone is afraid of something. Maybe it's heights, needles or tight spaces. One fear that is shared by more people than any other however, is public speaking.

Getting over this fear takes some practice but if you're able make it an asset, you'll feel empowered both personally and professionally. Even more, when you're able to connect with people, it's a great reminder of your value and worth to everyone around you.

What if You Mess Up?

No one is going to deny that there are more enjoyable things than public speaking. Being the center of attention makes you nervous and what will people think if you screw up? Believe it or not, the best public speakers in the world will tell you that they make mistakes all the time. The best part is most of the time, nobody notices. And when mistakes do happen, it brings about a moment of levity that reminds the audience that whoever they're listening to is a human just like them.

Most people aren't born as great public speakers. Fortunately, it's a skill that can be learned and a fear that can be overcome. If you're willing to step outside your comfort zone and put in the work, you'll be setting yourself apart both personally and professionally. Not only will you have developed a skill that makes you more valuable to your organization, your confidence and sense of self-worth will grow in other areas of your life as well. It can even help you improve your everyday communication skills as well. Challenge yourself and give it a try.

If you work in the Life Sciences industries in the Bay Area, I am a recruiter that can help you advance in your career. Contact me, Jeff King, at jking@rqfocus.com or (541) 639-3501.

---

Essential Skills for Leadership

You consider yourself a leader. After all, you've spent most of your career managing employees and overseeing large teams of people. Sure, you've made some bad hires and dealt with difficult situations just like everyone else, but you have a track record of success. Maybe you've always been a leader, or you developed the skills to become one in recent years. Whatever the case may be, the time has come for you to pursue a new leadership opportunity. You've dusted off your resume, started hunting for jobs and even landed a couple of interviews. If you hope to find the opportunity you're looking for however, you'd best be sure some of the skills mentioned below are polished.

Communication

There's been no shortage of articles written about the importance of communication but that's for good reason. It's a vital skill for any leader. We've all had that boss at some point that is more of a dictator than a leader. You constantly find yourself second-guessing the job you're doing and wondering if your performance is above board or lacking. Working for this kind of superior is no fun and now you make it a point to communicate with those around you in every sense of the word.

It's also important to remember that not all communication is verbal. When you're interviewing for a new job, the hiring manager is going to scour your resume for grammar and word choice. During the interview they will also pay attention to non-verbal communication cues like body language, how you shook their hand and how actively you listen with your eyes as well as your ears.

Vision

In order to be successful, companies are always looking for ways to increase the bottom line, save money and make their processes more efficient. They know you can't do business the same way forever. For this reason, you'd better be armed with some real-life examples of how your vision improved a company's prospects in the past. Did you implement a new marketing campaign because the old one wasn't working? Maybe you re-wrote the policies and procedures manual because the one from 2002 was no longer relevant.

Assertiveness

Anyone in a position of leadership is going to be forced to make decisions at some point. There's no avoiding it. Hiring managers will want to see evidence of this skill too. They will surely ask you about important decisions you made in the past. Not only that, they are going to want to know how you arrived at the decision and what the outcome was. Your ability to highlight your decision-making skills in a favorable light could be the deciding difference in whether you get the job or not.

Ability to Adapt

Even if your resume screams that you're the most qualified candidate for the job, you have to be able to adapt. After all, you're applying for a job at a new company where chances are the culture, values, and ways of doing things aren't what they were in your previous post. If your plan is to come in, clean house, and do things the way you've always done them, chances are you won't get the job. On the other hand, if you can demonstrate that you're eager to learn, listen, implement necessary changes and receive input from all sides, you'll quickly set yourself apart from other candidates.

Influence

When the word influence comes to mind, you probably think about the ability to get others to do what you want. While this is certainly a large part of it, how you go about influencing others is important too. Sure, you can influence people through fear, intimidation and barking orders, but it probably won't last long as people will quit or fail to respect your authority. Conversely, if you're able to lead by example, portray confidence, keep a level-head and meet your subordinates on their level, your chances of being a successful leader are much greater.

Effective leadership is more important now than ever in the workplace. Without the right people in place to make decisions, the chances of an organization succeeding are slim to none. That's why hiring managers spare no expense in finding the perfect fit for each and every position of leadership. Even if you consider yourself a seasoned leader and have the track record to back it up, you're going to have to demonstrate all the necessary skills to do the job effectively. Before you step into that next interview, take a moment to give some of the qualities above some serious thought. Doing so will provide honest insight and just might be what puts you over the top.

If you are an experienced leader looking for a job in the Life Sciences industries in the Bay Area, or an employer seeking a high-quality employee to fill a leadership position, contact me Jeff King at (541) 639-3501. I serve the pharmaceutical, biotech, and medical device fields.

---

Balancing Work and Parenting Stress

Maybe you're already there. You're married with a stable household income and a couple of kids you take to little league and swim lessons. Heck, maybe you or your spouse find an hour a week to volunteer in their classroom. Good on you! But how much of your time do you spend at work? Answering calls from clients that aren't happy or need to be resupplied? Or maybe you're not in sales and your boss needs you to meet that product release deadline so he can give a presentation to the marketing team. There's no doubt, the demands placed upon you in the 21st century workplace mean that you're always at work, even when you're not.

It's all too easy to become so consumed by your work that you neglect those that you're providing for. Have you said no to attending your son's flag football game or your daughter's acting recital because work got in the way? If so, it's a sign that your work-spouse-family balance might be out of order.

Have a Vision

It's all too easy to toil away your time for dollars in the hope that it will make the lives around you better. It very well could, but only financially speaking. But what about you? What about your role for you, your spouse and the children you created together? Don't they deserve the best you have to offer as a human and not just an ATM?

It's easy to fall into the trap of providing so much that you forget about sharing your time - your most precious commodity. The demands of work will always be there. However, your health, time with your kids and prime years with your loved ones go by quick. Now. Now is the time to evaluate what is most important in your life. Ask yourself some tough questions about what is most important to you... You might very well find that the relationships with those you love are more important than your bank account balance.

Develop a Game Plan

You do this every day at work. Sales meeting at 9:00, new employee orientation handshakes at 10:30 and budget overview at 2:30. The rest of the day is filled with unanswered emails and voicemails, not to mention the tasks that you set out to accomplish in the first place. So, what can you do to get off the hamster wheel?

Time Block

It's been well documented that the most successful business people structure their day according to what's important, what needs to be done and what their family needs.

In that light, if you make a point to set time aside to answer emails for an hour in the morning (that's when people are most likely to respond), engage the needs of your boss and colleagues in the late morning and early afternoon, and the remaining hours to whatever else needs to be done, you might very well find yourself leaving at closing time with the day's tasks accomplished and excited to catch the last 30 minutes of your child's sports practice.

Delegate

No one is going to question the job you do. Heck, they probably encourage you to take more time for yourself and family away from the office, but you refuse. The bottom line is that as your responsibilities grow, you have less time to get everything done. There comes a point that you can't do it all on your own.

This is when hiring well-qualified help can become your greatest asset. Sure, there is the overhead of hourly wages, additional technology and equipment. But with the right training, this individual can afford you normal hours, quality time with your family and a restful night's sleep. If done right, your bottom line should grow and you'll find yourself with much less chance of an early stress-induced health scare.

Think Long-Term

It sounds redundant but the fact is that most of the workforce trades hours for dollars at the end of the month and repeats the process until it's the end - whatever that may be. Even if you're not raking in the big checks like your boss, there are still things you can do that matter long-term.

The Commodity of Time

This is something the younger generation of the workforce understands. Sure, millennials get a bad wrap for being entitled and lazy but, those that understand the value of hard work understand that Time is also as an asset that has an expiration date. While it couldn't be more important to care for your family's financial well-being, time is truly priceless. Ask yourself the question of how you can best spend your time with your family while you still have it. The paycheck will always be there.

Whether you're where you want to be in your career or starting at the bottom and working your way up, you have people that depend on you. Your spouse or significant other, your kids and most importantly YOU. No one will ever downplay the importance of providing and being responsible so that you and those closest to you can be secure in the future. But there comes a point when you have to evaluate what is most important to you and your loved ones. If you answer some honest questions and set necessary boundaries, your work and life will thank you for it.

If you are working in a job in the Life Sciences industries in the Bay Area, where you are unable to balance parenting with work, contact me, Jeff King. I am a recruiter for the pharmaceutical, biotech, and medical device industries. I can help find you an employer that gives you the scheduling that you need to find time with your family.